YOU SAID....WE DID....

You said ...What is happening in the graveyard to the graves with the white markers?

We asked Chorley Council for an update. They responded with this message: We wanted to update you regarding the work taking place at Adlington Cemetery. As you may have seen, we have recently undertaken routine safety inspections to make sure our cemeteries remain safe for all visitors.

Some gravestones have been identified as being unsafe and may be at risk of falling over. We have attempted to contact all affected gravestone owners and will try to make contact again, to discuss all options available to reinstate the memorials in a safe way.

For those we are unable to contact, or where we have not had a response, work will begin to carefully lay these memorial headstones flat. This will be done with the utmost respect. This work was due to start at Adlington Cemetery on 13 October, however we have listened to your concerns and except for two critical headstones which are over 2.5 metres in height, we have moved this date back to 27 October to allow more time for people to get in touch.

After this time, gravestones can still be reinstated in the future, and we would ask anyone who would like to discuss this to contact us. We will be updating our signage to ensure people visiting the cemetery in the future are aware.

To identify which memorial headstones may be unsafe, a first round of checks was carried out by our officers who have undergone relevant training. This involved both visual and physical inspections. A further inspection is taking place by qualified stonemasons to confirm the identified headstones before laying them down flat. If a headstone has been identified as unsafe and family members wish to have it reinstated, they will need to instruct a qualified stonemason. We recognise this is a difficult situation for families and so we can support families to minimise costs, waiving any of the council's usual fees and contributing to the costs of any works, please contact us to discuss further. 01257 515494
